Get real: Re-engineering your co-op

Thom Armstrong, April English, Darren Kitchen and Michael Rodgers

Co-op housing is a 40-year success story. But smart leaders know that co-ops will have to make real and significant changes to be successful in the decades following the end of government funding agreements. And the smartest leaders know that it's best to change before you have to.

Your co-op is your home and your community. It's also a housing business and a real estate asset. What changes will you have to make in your governance, management and long-term planning to succeed in the decades to come? How will change affect the way you see your business and your community?

Join us for a day of "getting real" and tackle these questions head on. We'll challenge you to celebrate your past without living in it. And we'll show you what it will take to make the future something we create, not something we endure.
